ABSTRACT

The primary objective of the Path of Harvest project was to provide warm, nutritious meals to homeless individuals in the Galle and Matara regions, addressing their immediate need for food and comfort. By distributing these meals directly to people living on streets, bus stands, and public spaces, the project aimed to reduce hunger, offer relief during difficult times, and ensure that those who are often overlooked felt cared for and supported. This objective focused on creating a small but meaningful impact in the daily lives of individuals who struggle to meet their basic needs.

Another key objective was to inspire young Leos to develop empathy, social responsibility, and a deeper understanding of community leadership. The project aimed to expose members to real-life challenges faced by vulnerable groups, encouraging them to take meaningful action and continue serving with compassion. By engaging in direct interaction with the homeless community, the project sought to strengthen the values of kindness, respect, and service within the Leo movement, while motivating the volunteers to create more sustainable and impactful service initiatives in the future.

PROJECT NEED ASSESSMENT

Benefiting Community	The primary benefitting community of the Path of Harvest project was the homeless individuals living across the streets and public spaces of Galle and Matara. These are people who often face each day with uncertainty unsure of where their next meal will come from, lacking stable shelter, and carrying the weight of daily survival. Many of them spend their time near bus stands, markets, pavements, and quiet corners of the towns, relying on the kindness of strangers to get through each day. By receiving warm meals, they were not only given nourishment but also a rare moment of comfort and relief in lives that are full of constant struggle. Beyond physical nourishment, the homeless community benefited emotionally and socially from the kindness shared by the Leos. For many, simple gestures a warm meal, a smile, a genuine conversation served as reminders that they are seen, valued, and not forgotten. This human connection helped uplift their spirits, even if just for a brief moment, and strengthened their sense of dignity. The project offered them more than food; it offered hope, compassion, and the reassurance that the community still cares for their wellbeing.
Identified Community Need	The Path of Harvest project arose from a clear and pressing need within the Galle and Matara town areas many individuals are forced to live without stable housing, regular meals, or access to basic necessities. As the towns grow busier each day, the struggles of the homeless community often remain hidden in plain sight. Many spend their days searching for leftover food, relying on occasional generosity, or going hungry when help doesn't come. This lack of consistent nutrition not only affects their physical health but also weakens their ability to face daily challenges with strength and dignity. It became evident that what this community needed most was reliable access to nourishing food and genuine human kindness. A simple meal can mean the difference between going to sleep hungry or feeling a moment of comfort and care. But beyond food, these individuals needed acknowledgment—someone to look them in the eye, speak to them with respect, and remind them that they are part of the community too. The identified need was not just about hunger; it was about restoring humanity, offering hope, and bridging the disconnect between society and those who are too often overlooked.
Service Opportunity	The Path of Harvest created a meaningful service opportunity for the members of both the Leo Club of Rahula College and the Centennial Leo Club of Richmond College. It allowed young volunteers to step out of their usual routines and directly engage with individuals who face daily hardships. Through preparing and distributing meals, Leos experienced firsthand how even the simplest act of service can make a profound difference in someone's day. This project offered them a chance to practice empathy, teamwork, and leadership while contributing to the wellbeing of a vulnerable group within their own communities. Beyond the immediate act of giving food, the project opened the door for deeper understanding and long-term service commitment. Interacting with the homeless community gave Leos insight into the realities of poverty, hunger, and social isolation. It encouraged them to think critically about how they, as young leaders, can continue to support those in need through future projects. The experience strengthened their sense of responsibility and inspired them to create more sustainable and impactful initiatives. Path of Harvest ultimately became a learning platform one that nurtured compassion, broadened perspectives, and reinforced the true spirit of humanitarian service.

Project Description	The Leo Club of Rahula College joined hands with the Centennial Leo Club of Richmond College to conduct a heartfelt community service initiative titled Path of Harvest. This project focused on providing warm, nourishing meals to homeless individuals living across the Galle and Matara town areas. The members of both clubs worked collaboratively to prepare and distribute food, ensuring that those who are often overlooked received support, kindness, and a moment of relief during their day.

As teams walked through streets, bus stands, marketplaces, and commonly occupied corners, they offered not only meals but also genuine smiles and compassionate conversations. The project created an atmosphere of care and empathy, bringing together youth volunteers in a powerful display of unity and service. Path of Harvest not only addressed hunger but also highlighted the importance of recognizing the dignity of every individual, making the initiative both meaningful and impactful.
